No lives were lost. The log stove a hole in her larboard side, well aft. Every effort was made to keep her aftoat, but the water gained rapidly. She was headed to shore before sinking, and Capt. Yerkee thinks she can be raised and Capt. Yerkee thinks she can be raised without much trouble. The Cora S. had a large passenger trip, among them several ladies, but there was not so much excitement as might have been expected. She had 250 bales of cotton on board. All of her passengers came around on the Caldwell. The Cora had just entered the Cincinnati and Arkansas river trade and this was her first trip. She was a stern-wheeler, past middle age, and was owned in part by her cierk, Mr. Al. Croxall. She is valued at about $10,000, and is insured for nearly that amount in Cincinnati offices.
